BUTTINSKI

THIS INSTRUMENT is encased in a pliable rubber moulding, reinforced by internal diecastings, one inside the handle and the other for mounting the dial switch. A press-button is provided for use when dialling and speaking. A substantial lobe, which forms a part of the rubber moulding, is pierced to enable the instrument to be hung up when not in use.

The instrument is available in two models:

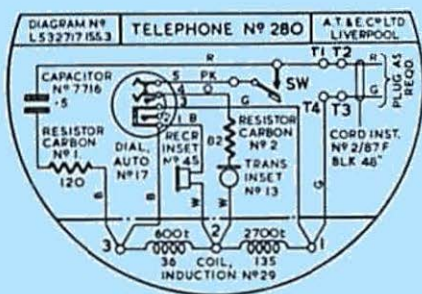

L.11366—Standard B.P.O. Type 280.

JL.11366—Tropical Pattern.

The induction coil and capacitor are mounted inside the handle diecasting. The transmitter and receiver insets are secured in position by means of brass clamping rings and a tough but pliable mouthpiece and earpiece respectively. The dial switch can be withdrawn by disconnecting the wires from its terminals and removing four screws.

A copy of the wiring arrangements is pasted inside the instrument, behind the receiver inset.

The instrument weighs 1 lb. 14 ozs.
